The twilight gathers in the hollow fields,
Where amber grass bends softly to the wind;
A lonely crow on the old fence yields
Its cry like memory half left behind.
The river moves with a silver hush,
Past roots that clutch the earth in sleep;
And night, from far-off woods, begins to brush
Its darkening veil across the deep.

No human voice disturbs the air,
Only the leaves in their murmuring fall;
Yet still the world seems strangely aware
Of some slow sorrow threading all. CO4(An)
